Higher glucose levels associated with lower memory and reduced hippocampal microstructure

A study published in the Journal of the American Academy of Neurology indicated that chronically higher blood glucose levels exert a negative influence on cognition, possibly mediated by structural changes in learning-relevant brain areas.

Read the full published study:

Higher glucose levels associated with lower memory and reduced hippocampal microstructure.
Lucia Kerti, MA, A. Veronica Witte, PhD, Angela Winkler, MA, Ulrike Grittner, PhD, Dan Rujescu, MD and Agnes Flöel, MD

---

Related Posts

- Syzygium cumini: A Tree from the Indian Subcontinent with Multiple Health Benefits
- Chinese Herbal Decoction Ge-Gen-Qin-Lian: An Effective Treatment for Type 2 Diabetes
- Sulforaphane Improves Glucose Control
- Gymnema sylvestre Improves the Function of and Regenerates Pancreatic Beta Cells
- Chinese Succulent Plant Shilianhua Regulates Glucose Metabolism and Insulin Sensitivity by Inhibiting GSK-3β and NF-κB